

Some people fail in school, but end up being successful in life. Why do you think that is the case? What is the most important trait or mindset a person can have in order to succeed in life?

Write/type as many paragraphs as you need to completely answer the question. Time yourself for 60 minutes.

All people are different from one another. Everyone has different qualities in him/her. So, It is possible for a person to have other interests than studying or reading. They have other interests like sports, drama, and practical works (welding, mechanical work, electrical work etc.). Consequently, they sometimes fail in school as they have a lack of interest in studies. But if we have strong determination, hard work and any other activities we can become successful in life. Thus, it means that although we are weak in studies or get an F in exams, we can get success in life.

The mindset students need to develop is one characterized by passion, sincerity and concentration for his/her interest. One will surely get success in life. By adapting this mindset students should make their interest a goal to achieve. So, in today's world if one cannot do much in studies, he or she need not to worry. He/she can find interest in something he/she is passionate about, and is prepared to work hard for.

An example of this is the famous Bollywood actor Akshay Kumar, who is known as the National Award Winner actor and one of the most successful actors in Bollywood. He opened up about his failures in an interview that he too failed in the school exams many times but he then found his interest in acting and worked hard to become successful. Now the world knows him as a star.

Everyone knows the famous scientist Thomas Alva Edison, for his great creations and as America's biggest creator. He was a school dropout, but he was a very successful innovator who gave some great creations to the world. His famous innovation was the electric bulb. He has created many other innovative gadgets too and has become successful although he was a dropout. Therefore, it doesn't really matter that if we are not great in our studies, we can't become successful in life.

Some other examples from the sports are Sachin Tendulkar (batsman) who is known as the "God of Cricket", Mahendra Singh Dhoni (wicket-keeper, batsman) who is known as "captain cool" are some of the best cricket figures and one of the most successful persons in cricket. They were not very good at their primary school studies but managed to pass the exam. Their vigorous effort and perseverance for a goal has made them successful in life.

If we want to become a successful person in life, we should have a proper goal, for which we should give one-hundred percent attention, emotion and self-confidence in you for it. This mindset will help the persons to set a goal and work hard to achieve it.
